The Russian government approved three levels of differentiation of electricity tariffs

The Russian government has approved the threshold values of the ranges of differentiated tariffs for electricity, the FAS Russia reported in its Telegram channel on Friday. The first level of energy consumption will be limited to 3,900 kWh/month. The second will be no more than 6,000 kWh/month, everything above that will be classified as the third range. Earlier, the FAS Russia reported that the "preferential" tariff for the first level will be set within the maximum level and will be indexed annually.
