The Ministry of Digital Development is discussing with the Ministry of Energy the idea of allowing the construction of data centres with self-sufficient power supply

The Ministry of Digital Development is actively working with the Ministry of Energy to plan the development of the Moscow region's energy system, so that within five to seven years at the latest, companies can once again build data centres in Moscow and other regions. Deputy Minister of Digital Development Evgeny Filatov announced this at a CIPR session, according to Vedomosti. Filatov noted that restrictions on connecting data centres to the power grid have currently been imposed in the capital and the region.
