Consumers to be billed for energy reserves

Regulators are once again trying to introduce the "take or pay" principle in power grids. The Ministry of Energy has once again proposed introducing payment for electricity transmission services based on the maximum declared, rather than actual, capacity. The industry is consistently against this initiative, expecting an increase in its own costs. The Ministry of Energy and Rosseti are counting on compensation for grid costs for maintaining capacity, but, according to analysts, this initiative will have a more pedagogical effect: if it only affects new consumers from 670 kW, the grid revenue will grow by no more than 1%.
