Novak expects partial recovery in Russia's energy consumption by 2027

Electricity consumption in Russia has already passed its lowest point, and a partial recovery is expected by 2027. This was announced to journalists by Deputy Prime Minister Alexander Novak on the sidelines of the "Russian Energy Week - 2026" international forum. "I believe we have moved past the peak of the decline in energy consumption, next year, we anticipate a partial recovery," he said.
