Russia and China discussed energy exports to China, taking into account growing consumption in the Far East

Russia and China discussed the issues of electricity supplies to China and the possibility of increasing them taking into account the growth of energy consumption in the Far East, the Russian Ministry of Energy reported following a meeting of the Russian-Chinese working group on cooperation in the field of electric power and renewable energy sources. The parties also discussed issues of mutual integration and recognition of certification systems for the origin of electrical energy. "The organization of the process of issuing and applying green certificates of origin of electricity in Russia and China will contribute to further mutual recognition of electricity certification systems between our countries," the Russian ministry noted.
