The President of the Russian Federation signed the law on STGO

On 13 July, Russian President Vladimir Putin signed the federal law "On systemically important territorial grid organizations" (STGO). The new rules will come into force on 1 September.

As the Telegram channel of the Ministry of Energy reported on 14 July, the law is a new stage in the development of the Russian electric power industry. It significantly changes the structure of the industry by introducing a single entity responsible for reliable energy supply. "With the adoption of the federal law, each region will have a company approved by the governor, which is obliged to be responsible for reliable and uninterrupted energy supply to the end consumer. Citizens will know exactly which organization to contact to eliminate power supply disruptions in the shortest possible period of time," noted Minister Sergei Tsivilev.
