South to be supported by small generation

System Operator proposes measures to mitigate energy deficit. As Kommersant has found out, System Operator has proposed covering the energy deficit in the south during the construction of new generation by building low-capacity gas power plants. According to experts, this will require the launch of at least 2 GW. Construction of large energy facilities based on Chinese gas engines will take at least two years and is not always cost-effective, market participants say.

Tulenergo reminds summer residents of electrical safety rules

Power engineers of Rosseti Centre and Volga region - Tulenergo warn owners of summer houses and plots of land about the need for safe behaviour near power facilities. Summer residents should be especially careful, because recreation areas are often adjacent to high-voltage power facilities. It is very important to know and observe the boundaries of security zones of overhead and cable power lines that are located near summer cottages, gardens and vegetable gardens.
