Novak instructed to systematically analyze the reasons for the growth of energy consumption in the Russian Federation

Russian Deputy Prime Minister Alexander Novak instructed the Ministry of Energy of the Russian Federation, the "System Operator" and the "Market Council" to conduct a systematic analysis of the reasons for the increase in energy consumption in the regions of the Russian Federation, the Government of the Russian Federation said in a statement following a meeting of the governing commission on the electric power industry. "It is necessary to understand in which regions this is related to mining, and in which regions it is related to the growth of the economy and industry. Where this is related to mining, a highly profitable business can independently build its own generation for its needs," Novak's words are quoted in the message.
