Electricity in the Far East is growing in price more than expected

After the launch of market pricing in the Far East, wholesale prices for electricity in the region are growing more than regulators predicted, even against the backdrop of a warmer January and reduced consumption. The historical maximum in the electricity trading sector was recorded at RUB 3,845 thousand per 1 MWh, while during the simulation trades, prices for the year were predicted at RUB 1,945 thousand per 1 MWh, taking into account the supply of hydroelectric power plants at tariffs. The Market Council expects some reduction in prices by the end of January, but the surge in electricity costs predictably caused discontent among large consumers.
